

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker, '36.

Profiles—Three Lincoln Men Who Wear The Black Robe of Justice

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE: Barrington D. Parker.

Barrington D. Parker, who in his 16 years as a U.S. District Court judge has handled some of Washington's most celebrated cases, has taken the position of senior judge, a post which will afford him a reduced case load.

"I had no way of dreaming the sort of things that would come across my life," says the semiretired Parker, 70, whose passionate and aggressive approach has gained him a reputation as a crusty, highly independent, no-nonsense judge. "When I was growing up, you know, Washington was quite a different city. I've seen segregation and discrimination in its rawest terms. It lives with you."

Defendants in Parker's courtroom have included John W. Hinckley, Jr.,

President Reagan's assailant; Richard Helms, the former Central Intelligence Agency director accused of lying to a Senate committee; Otto E. Passman, a former U.S. congressman charged with accepting a bribe; and three accused murderers of a former Chilean ambassador.

Parker once blocked President Carter from issuing wage and price guidelines, ruled invalid a congressional amendment that barred Communists from job training programs, and — in one of the rulings of which he says he is most proud — refused to accept a plea bargain in a foreign bribery case until attorneys revealed the name of the official who received the bribes.

Campus Briefs

Some recent and prominent campus visitors have included:

- The husband and wife team of actor Ossie Davis and actress Ruby Dee, who spoke and performed March 10 at Brown Memorial Chapel.

- Still active, still crusading, and still a voice to be heard, James Meredith, spoke February 12, at Brown Chapel. Meredith gained worldwide attention in 1962 when he became the first black person to enroll at the University of Mississippi. It led to the calling of thousands of federal troops to quell the many rioters who opposed integration.

James Meredith

In 1966, Meredith launched the March Against Fear, a crusade across Mississippi to encourage black voter registration. At the march's outset, Meredith was shot by a white man; when he later recovered, he was joined on his walk by civil rights leaders Martin Luther King and Stokely Carmichael.

Today, as one of the legends of the Civil Rights Movement, Meredith is the leading proponent of "black reunification," a program of entrepreneurship, community self-sufficiency, and the establishing of better U.S. relations with Africa.

Dr. Ivan Van Sertima

- Renowned literary critic, linguist, anthropologist, and author Dr. Ivan Van Sertima spoke on February 4 in Ware Center Little Theatre. His free lecture and slide presentation on Blacks in the field of science was sponsored by the Physics Department as part of Lincoln's observance of Black History Month, according to Physics instructor Irvin Heard.

Originally from Guyana, South America, Dr. Van Sertima is the author of the highly acclaimed "They Came Before Columbus: The African Presence in Ancient America." He is associate professor of African Studies at Rutgers University and editor of the Journal of African Civilizations. He is also editor of a number of recent books.

- Two prominent figures visited the campus to help the University commemorate the January 15 birthday of slain civil rights leader the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Humorist and human rights activist Dick Gregory, delivered one of his inspiring talks January 13 before an overflow crowd at Wright Hall.

The next day, January 14, A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr., circuit judge for the U.S. Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, gave a spellbinding speech on Dr. King's place in world history and "noble" contributions in the area of civil rights.

- Novelist Ishmael Reed lectured December 5, at Mary Dod Brown Chapel. Reed has published 11 novels and was nominated for the Pulitzer Prize and The National Book Award in 1973. He is an associate fellow of Yale University's Calhoun College and a member of the Academy of American poets. His appearance was sponsored by the English Department and the Tolson Society. □

Alumni Directory Set for Release

Many alumni have already received telephone calls from the Harris Publishing Company, publishers of our official Alumni Directory. The purpose of the telephone contact is to verify the information alumni provided on the directory questionnaires and the current information held on alumni records.

At the same time, the telephone representatives of the publishing company are inviting alumni to purchase personal copies of the directory.

The directory is tentatively scheduled for release in August or September 1986.

If you are interested in ordering a copy and have not heard from the publisher by June 27, 1986, you may contact the publisher direct at the following address: Customer Service Department, Bernard C. Harris Publishing Company, Inc., 3 Barker Avenue, White Plains, NY 10601.

The directory will be divided into four sections. The first part will contain interesting pictures and information on the University, and will be followed by an alphabetical section with individual listings on each alum.

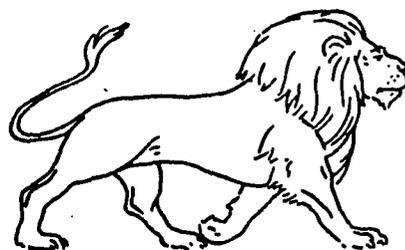

Entries will include name, class year, degree, and professional information such as job title, firm name, address and telephone, as well as home address and phone. The third section will list alumni by class and the last index will list alumni geographically by city, state and foreign country.

All of the information in the directory will be researched and compiled by the Harris Publishing Company.

The updated information will be obtained through questionnaires sent to alumni and will be followed up by telephone verification. Your cooperation in providing updated information will insure the success of this fascinating and comprehensive alumni directory. Each alum will be given an opportunity to order the directory when his other information is verified by phone. (Only Lincoln University alumni will be able to purchase a copy.)

The entire project will be undertaken at virtually no cost to Lincoln University. The Harris Company will finance the operation through the sale of directories to alumni. The school will not benefit financially from the directory sales, but will derive substantial benefit from the completely updated alumni records. So, for those of you who have wondered, "where are they now?" you will soon find out. Further information on this project is forthcoming. □

Profiles

1936, Parker earned a master's degree in economics from the University of Pennsylvania and worked briefly as an economist and teacher before going on to law school at the University of Chicago. An outspoken, once active Republican, Parker was appointed a federal judge by President Nixon but calls the Reagan administration's challenge to affirmative action "an attempt to turn back the clock."

Born in Rosslyn, Va., and raised in Washington, D.C., Parker is the son of George A. Parker, who founded the Robert H. Terrell School of Law, a night law school for blacks that closed in the 1950s. Judge Parker taught there himself and also practiced law with his father in Washington, D.C., for over 20 years.

Parker is married to the former Marjorie Holloman, who once served on the D.C. City Council and was chair of the board of the University of the District of Columbia. The Parkers have two children: Jason, a Chinese scholar who is a staff director for the Council of Learned Societies, and Barrington, Jr., a New York City lawyer.

Justice Franklin W. Morton, Jr., '41

which may be the result of rigorous campaigning in Brooklyn's First Assembly District at the side of his father, who was Morton's second major influence.

"My father wanted to be a judge in the worst way, and that is what made an impression on me," says Morton of Franklin W. Morton, Sr., a criminal lawyer whose political ambitions as an assemblyman and judge went unrealized.

In addition to his parents, others close to Morton, now 65, have left lasting marks. Three of his grandparents were physicians; his paternal grandmother, Verina Harris Morton Jones, was the second black woman to practice medicine in Brooklyn.

"I was torn between being a judge or becoming a doctor," says Morton. Resolution came shortly after he enrolled at Lincoln: Continuing in pre-med would mean no time for basketball. His subsequent change to pre-law enabled him to shoot for success in both courts.

Having been in private practice as well as an assistant U.S. attorney and assistant Brooklyn district attorney, Morton became a city judge in 1958 and went on to serve the court for 27 years. Most recently, he has presided over civil cases; as always, he leaves behind his judge's wooden gavel. "I never use it," he says.

Morton has received numerous awards for child advocacy and humanitarianism. His latest recognition was an honorary doctorate from his alma mater, St. John's University Law School in Jamaica, Queens, where he is a council member of the law school Alumni Association and a member of the Alumni Federation.

U.S. SUPREME COURT JUSTICE: Thurgood Marshall

The U.S. Supreme Court reached back over a century of legal precedence to rule that if a Black man is indicted by a grand jury that intentionally excludes Blacks, any subsequent conviction must be overturned, according to U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

In a 6-3 ruling, the court refused to reinstate the conviction of California murderer Booker Hillery, Jr., who won a new trial 21 years after his 1962 crime because Blacks were missing from his grand jury.

Marshall, writing for the majority, said that since 1880 the court has held that Blacks could not be excluded from grand juries and if they are, any conviction must be reversed; the court saw no reason to change that view.

"Intentional discrimination in the selection of grand jurors is a grave constitutional trespass," he said. "The remedy for this violation is not disproportionate to the evil that it seeks to deter. If grand jury discrimination becomes a thing of the past, no conviction will ever again be lost on account of it."

A native of Baltimore, Md., Justice Marshall was the first Black to become associate justice of the Supreme Court. He was nominated to the court by President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1967, after serving as Solicitor General of the United States from 1965 to 1967 and a United States circuit judge from 1961 to 1965. He graduated from Lincoln in 1930 and Howard University Law School in 1933. During years of service as counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, he was the key in many fights for civil rights for all Americans.

Justice Marshall is the recipient of eight honorary degrees and dozens of other awards. □

THE GENTLE JUDGE: Franklin W. Morton Jr.

Lincoln 1941 graduate Franklin W. Morton, Jr., is said to be a person of feeling and quiet influence — like his mother, Inez. And her influence, above any other made the most lasting impression on him.

"She inspired me because she cared for people," says Justice Morton. "And she made me believe I could be anything I wanted to be."

Inside the Brooklyn State Supreme Courtroom where Morton presides, the care and compassion of his mother's teachings have been evident. His low-key manner almost belies his high-power placement,

Dr. Albert H. Wheeler, Prominent Leader, and Professor, Retires — 1936 Lincoln Graduate

Dr. Albert H. Wheeler, a distinguished civil rights and political activist in Michigan, recently retired as professor of microbiology and immunology at the University of Michigan, after 33 years on the school's medical faculty.

A life member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the first black mayor of Ann Arbor (1975-1978), Dr. Wheeler has chalked up an outstanding record of public service. He wrote the original proposal for the first Michigan Civil Rights Commission, which was incorporated in the 1961 state constitution; served a four-year term as director of the Department of Christian Service for the Catholic Archdiocese of Detroit; and was the Michigan delegate to the 1968 National Democratic Convention in Chicago.

After graduating from Lincoln, he earned a master's degree from Iowa State College in 1937, then a master's in 1938 and a doctorate in 1944, both in public health from the University of Michigan. He worked in Ann Arbor's University Hospital as a research associate with Dr. Reuben L. Kahn, who developed the Kahn test for syphilis. The first black faculty member at the University of Michigan, he was appointed in 1952 as an associate professor of microbiology and dermatology.

Dr. Wheeler was the first chairperson of the National Campaign for Human Development, a creation of the United States Council of Catholic Bishops.

Former president of the Michigan NAACP and chairman of the state's NAACP Education Committee, Dr. Wheeler, who is listed in "Who's Who Among Black Americans" and "Who's Who in America," has served on the board of directors of Ann Arbor Community Chest, as vice-chairman of Ann Arbor Model Cities Program, on the committee of the Michigan Black Caucus, and as chair of the Washtenaw County Committee on Economic Opportunity. Other affiliations include the Washtenaw County Nursing Council and Sigma Xi.

In speaking of his accomplishments, Dr. Wheeler is quick to credit his family: wife Emma, an NAACP life member and local chapter president for 15 years; daughter Mary McDade, a federal court clerk in Peoria; daughter Alma M. Smith, Salem Township school board member; and daughter Nancy Francis Walker, senior partner in an Ann Arbor law firm.

The Wheelers have eight grandchildren. □
