

DMS Joins Lincoln University's In-Person Open House

For the first time since the onset of the COVID pandemic, Lincoln University held its open house in-person this year. Prospective students got to experience our beautiful campus, meet with representatives from each of our academic programs, and engage with some of our current students to determine whether the Lincoln experience is right for them.

Vickie Riley, our new secretary since Cecilia Gatheca moved to the office of Academic Affairs, organized the department's participation, including the setup and takedown of the DMS booth, printing of fliers and other recruitment materials, and coordination of schedules for participating faculty and staff. The opportunity to finally meet prospective students in-person was welcomed by all.

Our department looks forward to serving another cohort of incredible Lincoln students. DMS has maintained an exceptional placement record in competitive employment and graduate studies opportunities for years, and we have begun developing a data science track to provide even more opportunities for our students. We hope that we can continue to equip future Lions with mathematical knowledge and quantitative reasoning skills that will help them go far in life.
